Community Engaged Buddhism

Wednesday evenings, September to December 2022

Course Objective:

Speakers who work in areas that have traditionally been referred to as “chaplaincy” (such as hospitals, prisons, hospices, nursing homes), as well as those referred to as community services, will be invited to share their experiences. Students will engage with our speakers to discuss: How may Buddhists contribute to the offering of these services and how may Buddhists benefit from these services?

Students will work on a project in small groups to identify in their own communities where these services are needed but perhaps missing and envision how such needed services may be provided.

They may create a plan to implement the ideas their groups generated. These plans would be evaluated by a panel and some of them may be selected to receive seed money to put these ideas into practice.
